New Children's Book Highlights Our Connection to the Sun

Anne Hunter Logue brings to life a refreshing story with a thought provoking message

PERKASIE, Penn. (March 7, 2018) – When Anne Hunter Logue lived in the mountains of New Hampshire, she was surrounded by artists and musicians where her creativity thrived. She recognized our connection to nature, the Sun and the Source. Logue illustrates this spiritual reminder for children in her book “The Story of the Sun.”

“The Story of the Sun” shares the tale of our innocence, our disillusionment and then our renewed faith. It uses the sun as a metaphor to represent life and our journey through life, creating a parallel with our relationship to the Sun and the beauty of the Sun and our relationship to our higher self and a higher power. Using descriptions about nature and returning to the simplicity that we find in Nature, Logue creates a simple tale with a profound message, affirming our place on Earth and demanding our respect for Mother Earth and all that she offers her inhabitants.

“We all have a precious connection to Source that is expressed so easily when we live in the beauty of nature,” Logue affirms “Life can get very complicated and we can easily lose the simplicity and our joy in life. “The Story of the Sun” reminds us that no matter what our path or place in life, our connection to Source energy can remain strong and vibrant.”

Logue has a background in holistic medicine and she uses that knowledge to portray the simple principals that we need to develop a strong connection with Source and live our life with joy and the innocence of childhood. It is a refreshing outlook that speaks to a young audience and the older people that have sometimes lost the freshness of childhood.
